Project 2: FINAL SUBMISSION Report

4/4/2023

FEEDBACK

The Project 2 assignment was an excellent start to interacting with others to gain understanding and learn directions for me to work on.

I am most proud of getting good feedback from many people that viewed the website. Primarily the customer was enjoying and excited about the direction it was going.

After requesting feedback on any changes needed the responses varied on the usability of the existing content, for example, one person replied by suggesting adding humor to the website for their own personal interest. This contrasted the mindset of the customer whom I was presenting the content for. So I did not change or add humor at this point. The customer replied how content they were with the layout, including the navigation, and the style of the photography being displayed, which contrasted with some suggestions received. So I kept the layout the same, with no changes for the customer.

Here are a few comments provided from the people providing feedback:

- "Provide a background for the navigation bar" (Instructor)
- Keep the navigation bar and website links the same (Customer)
- "...looks creative, original, and eye-catching to me" (feedback)
- "I would suggest a dinosaur icon or animation-style logo" (feedback)

In regards to resources (frameworks, libraries, code snippets, plugins) I work at a slower pace and had issues arise this semester that continue. So there are areas for me to improve but I advanced as far as could by using grids, columns, bootstrap organized layout, and video to get the best feedback I was capable of doing.

The only advanced feature I attempted was to display background video in the Jumbotron but I continually had issues with sizing and repetition of play. So while it was seventy percent working I reverted back to HTML and SCSS for the option.

In summary, it has been difficult to manage things with the personal issues that arose this semester. However, this layout of doing two projects with intertwining hours within the weeks is a valuable direction to lead students to gain experience with customers, specialists, and friends or family. The timing of the course will be a work in progress for my style of personality but with time and practice, I feel I can advance more and develop more skills. The process of getting feedback was one of the highest benefits for me. I would appreciate having a group to give feedback, in and out of class, to understand to strengths and difficulties, of other students, so I can learn.
